What is a registered paramedic?

To call yourself a paramedic you must be registered with the Paramedicine Board of Australia (the Board). Registration is open to anyone who can satisfy the Board that they are qualified and suitable for registration.

A number of pathways are available under the Health Practitioner Regulation National Law (the National Law) for an individual to demonstrate that they are qualified for registration. Holding an approved or accepted qualification, holding a substantially equivalent qualification or holding a relevant qualification and successfully completing the required paramedicine competency assessment are ways that can be used to demonstrate that you are qualified to apply for registration as a paramedic.

Paramedic Practice

Historically, in Australia, paramedics are generally associated with the provision of emergency or unscheduled care to acutely ill or injured persons, predominantly in an out of hospital or primary care environment. This may involve autonomous practice, complex patient assessments and delivery of treatment which may include the administration of scheduled medicines.

Acknowledging this history, and given the broad and inclusive definition of ‘practice’¹ for a registered health professional used by professions regulated under the National Law, any use of professional skills and knowledge by a registered paramedic that may impact (directly or indirectly) on the safe and effective delivery of paramedic services could be considered ‘practising’ as a paramedic.

This provides opportunities for workforce flexibility and innovation in recognising that the actual breadth of paramedic practice is not limited and can encompass a wide variety of both clinical and non-clinical activities in a wide variety of roles and settings in jurisdictional ambulance services, health services, hospitals, the defence forces, private industry, as well as academic and broader government sectors.

‘Paramedic practice’ or the ‘scope of paramedic practice’ is not specifically defined or described for the paramedicine profession in the National Law. An individual practitioner’s scope of practice is determined by their individual skills, training and competence to practice safely in the work they do and also may be described as part of their employment. It is an individual registered paramedic’s ethical and professional responsibility to maintain recency in their scope of practice and ensure (and demonstrate if required) that they are suitably trained and competent to undertake whatever activities they do in their practice of the profession. As set out in the Professional indemnity insurance arrangements registration standard, practitioners must also ensure that their professional indemnity insurance arrangements provide sufficient cover for all aspects of their paramedic practice.

It should be noted that registration as a paramedic by the Board is separate from any workplace credentialing or defining of a scope of practice' undertaken by an employer.
